ABSTRACT

This research analyzes the representation of Forklik Café & Billiard's consumer experience through Google reviews, using Stuart Hall's theory and the five dimensions of experiential marketing (Sense, Feel, Think, Act, Relate). This study aims to describe the characteristics of the representation, how each dimension is manifested, and how the meaning of the experience shapes the digital image. Using a qualitative content analysis method of 20 Google Reviews in the span of 2023-2025, it was found that Forklik Café & Billiard is represented as a place that is comfortable, evokes positive emotions, is considered rational in terms of price and concept, encourages activity, and supports social interaction. Although the dominant image was positive, criticisms of the payment system and service were also present. In conclusion, consumer reviews collectively construct meaning and shape the dynamic image of Forklik Café & Billiard as a modern destination relevant to urban lifestyles in the digital space.
